A UNIQUE GIFT TO AMERICAN ART

Maurice Hunter, A Pure-blooded Bantu, and Possessor of a "Divine Physique" writes a new Chapter in the History of American Art

By H. H. MUDGAL

The Negro is a vital factor in American civilization. He is not only a valuable asset to the nation, but he is also a source of inspiration and motivation for other races. His unique culture and traditions have contributed significantly to the growth and development of American society. The Afro-American has played an essential role in shaping the nation's history and has left an indelible mark on its cultural heritage.

Maurice Hunter's story is a testament to the resilience and creativity of the Afro-American people. Born in the rural South, he overcame numerous obstacles to pursue his dreams and become a successful artist. His work reflects the rich legacy of African art and culture, as well as the complexity of the human experience.

Hunter's unique talent and artistic vision have earned him recognition both in the United States and abroad. His paintings and sculptures have been exhibited in prestigious galleries and museums, and his work has been featured in numerous publications and exhibitions. His contributions to the art world have been acknowledged with numerous awards and honors.

In conclusion, Maurice Hunter's story is a inspiring example of the power of determination and artistic expression. His work has opened new avenues for exploration and innovation in the field of art, and his legacy will continue to inspire and influence future generations of artists and scholars.

---

Above: Installation and prayer by the Nine Men of the East
Below: The exquisite and divine body of Maurice Hunter

The Pittsburgh Courier (1911-1950); Dec 20, 1930; ProQuest Historical Newspapers: Pittsburgh Courier pg. A3