Leave the U. N. I. A.

By KIMA WALLER

Moreau, Montreal, Quebec

I am just as a member of the U. N. I. A. as my brother is, and I'm just as human as he is. The other day I heard that the U. N. I. A. was about to make a move again. I says to myself, 'Well, I guess that's just like a pig to teeny-weeny little pigs. It's just for a pig to teeny-weeny little pigs.' And so I says to my brother, 'Hey, what do you think about this U. N. I. A. thing?' And he says, 'Well, I don't know, I don't know.' And I says, 'Well, I don't care. I'm just going to stay away from it.'

On Being Black

By MRS. H. S. BRIDGLAND

Forgetting our history is the same as forgetting our identity. We have to remember where we come from in order to understand where we are going. We can't just ignore our past and pretend that everything is fine. We have to face the challenges of our history and work towards a better future. The only way we can do that is by learning about our history and sharing it with others.

On Racial Freedom

By MRS. J. E. BRIDGLAND

The struggle for racial freedom is not just about breaking down barriers and gaining equal rights. It's about making sure that every person has the opportunity to live their life to the fullest. We need to continue to work towards a society where everyone is treated with respect and dignity, and where everyone has the chance to succeed.

A Senator's View

By D. R. BRIDGLAND

As a senator, I have a duty to represent the interests of all my constituents. That means working to ensure that everyone has access to quality healthcare, education, and job opportunities. It also means fighting against discrimination and working to create a more just and equitable society. I take these responsibilities very seriously, and I am committed to serving the people of my state to the best of my ability.

The Tower of the Times

By J. S. BRIDGLAND

In times of crisis, it is important to remain focused and hopeful. We must remember that even in the darkest moments, there is always a glimmer of hope. We must continue to work towards a better future, and to support each other along the way. Together, we can overcome any challenge.
